Let us help you navigate autism

I am absolutely delighted to announce the launch of our latest project - Autism: What Next?. It is a free digital toolkit, a central hub to help individuals and families navigate the first year following an autism diagnosis.

For decades, one of the most common issues in autism has been the lack of quality information and guidance available to parents of children or families and individuals seeking and receiving an autism diagnosis.

Thrown into a world of Google, full of misleading and inaccurate information, people are left feeling helpless, confused and frustrated at a time when they are at their most vulnerable. They spend countless hours and funds seeking the best information and resources that should be readily available in one place. Now, it is - www.autismwhatnext.com.au

Autism: What Next? will ensure people have access to the best quality, evidence-based information and resources to ensure they are empowered to support themselves or their loved ones on the autism spectrum.

Designed and developed by teams of people with lived experience, including autistic adults, parents of children with autism and some of Australia's leading clinicians working in autism.

We have enclosed posters and flyers that may be helpful in your clinic/service to assist families and/or individuals receiving an autism diagnosis. If you would like to order more posters or flyers, please visit www.AWNorderform.paperform.co or you can also download them yourself from our resources section.

We trust Autism: What Next? will be a reliable, evidence-based resource you can confidently refer your patients to at the time of their autism diagnosis.
